Who Are We?

Arizona State University's Tech-YA Lit Consortium

Google Docs

What Do We Do?

- We are a group of educators from all over the planet committed to integrating new technologies into the teaching of YA lit
- We share classroom strategies and offer professional support to one another

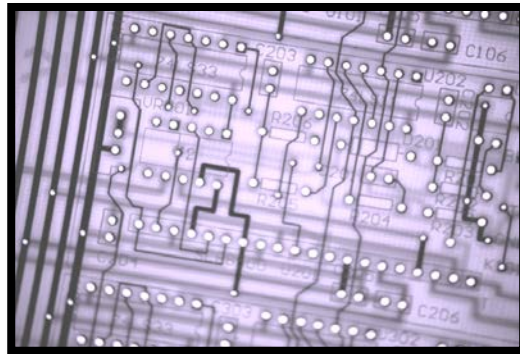

Why Use Tech to Teach YA Lit?

- Technology is changing the way students read and write.
- We want to recognize and appreciate the ways students engage in literacy on the Internet

Why Use Tech to Teach YA Lit?

- We want to make students' at-home literacies a part of the classroom
- We want to use tech to affirm our advanced learners and support our struggling learners

Using Blogs to Teach YA Lit

- Steph Knight, 7th and 8th grade ELA teacher, Tesseract School, Paradise Valley, AZ
- Uses school-created wiki to blog with students
 - Posting Guidelines
 - Think before you post; consider your audience and who you're representing, etc
 - Commenting Guidelines
 - Be constructive, not hurtful; answer a question or add meaningful information to the content topic, etc

Teaching Chains

- Students blog weekly about the novel Chains
 - Students post an initial response and reply twice to other posts
- Teacher is coordinating unit with social studies unit on American Revolution

Chains Discussion Topics

- Describe the life of slaves in the American colonies in the 1700s. Discuss the difference between a servant and a slave. How did Miss Mary Finch's view of slavery differ from that of most slave owners? Why does Mr. Robert accuse Isabel of lying when she tells him that she read Miss Mary's will? Explain why Pastor Weeks thinks that teaching a slave to read only "leads to trouble."

Sample Chains Blog Post

- I believe that the forefathers of the U.S.A. ... saw America as a country where freedom, fairness, and happiness would lead to world peace. For example, they spent their lives striving to make America their ideal country to live in. This shows that if they didn't want America to be successful, they wouldn't have spent so much time on shaping America's future. This also shows that if our founding fathers didn't found the U.S.A. with freedom in mind, this country would be very different. In conclusion, the most influential people in American history are the people who remember that we all deserve freedom.

Steph Knight's Thoughts

- Had to deal with school's technology issues and parent concerns, but once everyone got used it, they "realized why this matters"
- "Students are taking charge of their learning"
- "Students have begun to do their own research and make outside connections with history"
- "It's what they're doing anyway..."

Steph Knight's Thoughts

- “It’s changed the dynamic of my class”
- “Once you set up a system and expectations, it does the teaching for you”
 - “It’s helping them learn respect for one another”
- “It’s making the book come alive”

It all began with PJ's first book, The Softwire, an intriguing, well-written story, that engaged readers. Let's hear the story's premise from one of the characters, Madame Lee:

they finished each book but wanted to continue their experience with the world their imaginations had created. How could they continue to experience the Rings of Orbis?

And so he created

1. History and Purpose

I launched AICL in May of 2006. By then, I had become an avid reader of a new form of expression--weblogs (blog for short)--and was keenly aware of their potential for impacting change.

As a relatively new assistant professor at a "Research I" university (the height of the "publish or perish" institution), I knew it was important that I publish my research in academic journals and books, but as a Native parent and former schoolteacher, I knew that those academic journals are not easily accessible or available to people who work with children on a daily basis...

I was raised at Nambe Owingeh (a federally recognized tribe) and I am tribally enrolled

Twelfth Grade Kills #5: The Chronicles of Vladimir Tod, by Heather Brewer

- Vladimir Tod is just like every other teenage boy in America. He has a best friend who would do anything for him and vice versa; he has someone at home who loves him and makes special sandwiches for his lunch; he loves a girl but their relationship is a little tricky; and he is desperately awaiting the end of senior year. Of course, there are some small qualifications or disclaimers that should be listed here. His best friend is actually his drudge, a human being who is Vlad's vampiric psychic slave. His aunt makes very nice peanut butter sandwiches for him but she adds capsules of human blood instead of jelly. He is love with a lovely young woman but he dreams of sucking her blood and knows a relationship with him would doom her to a life not of her choosing. And while the end of senior year will be nice, if he doesn't find a way to save the human race by the end of Christmas break, he and everyone he knows will die. Other than that, Vlad is a perfectly normal, half-human, half-vampire teenager.

Based on a Real Group of Women from WWII

Ida Mae Jones may very well be the best female pilot in the United States, and he country needs her.

- Gatlin, South Carolina, is the quintessential southern town. Its citizens participate in a caste system according to how far back their families go in the history of the town (preferably before the Revolutionary War but surely the Civil War), the town revolves around its annual cultural events (such as the pie baking contest at the local fair and the annual Civil War battle reenactment), and few people move in or out as years go by. As described in Garcia and Stohl's previous tale of Gatlin, however, there are things about also things about the town that would give anyone nightmares, including a society of witches (aka Casters) and related vampires and demons, who operate on the fringe of society, usually.
