

the atomic orbital on the alcohol oxygen that contains the single electron after the H atom abstraction is assumed to be a p orbital, based on the fact that the methyl radical is flat. The relative energies of the two p orbitals on the oxygen atoms is debatable, of course, they are probably similar. However, their relative ordering doesn't matter to the outcome of the problem, you could prove this to yourself if you like!