

In the singlet state, the reaction probably proceeds diabatically via a "jump" from excited state to ground state at a funnel on the excited state surface. The reaction efficiency may be reduced due to return to the reactants at the crossing point. The triplet reaction experiences no avoided crossing and has high efficiency