Kittrie sees global nuclear threat

The attacks of Sept. 11, 2001, were the worst ever to hit U.S. soil. But ASU Law Professor Orde Kittrie fears those attacks would pale in comparison to what could happen if terrorists were able to acquire a nuclear weapon. Kittrie has just returned from Russia where he was part of a discussion about the country’s nuclear weapons stockpiles and keeping them away from terrorists. Read more

Researcher finds molecular key to colorful parrot feathers

When it comes to the brilliant plumage of parrots, it turns out there is more going on than meets the eye. Research by ASU’s Kevin McGraw is shedding new light on what is chemically responsible for the birds’ bright red feathers – and why the color variations are important. Read more
